The Pikes Peak Marathon in Colorado takes runners 7,185 vertical feet up the mountain to the summit before returning back to the starting line in Manitou, itself at an elevation of 6,300 feet. (The marathon still ranks Hatfield vs. "Also, think through your pre-race nutrition, as starting at night is different than most runners are used to." (August 9-10, calicoracing.com) Photo by Joyce Forier 7 of 8 Hatfield and McCoy Marathon Relive one of Appalachia's greatest shoot 'em-up grudges with the Hatfield McCoy Marathon, the pinnacle event of the annual Hatfield-McCoy reunion. Participants can choose between a full or half marathon, 10K, or 51K ultra. "The spirit of Aloha surrounds you," says Sharron Faff, director of Kona Marathon Events. McCoy finishers against each other, dividing non-blood participants evenly between the families.) If you aren't in it for the grudge, the course around Blackberry Mountain is classic Appalachian scenery—the first 13 miles being the toughest. After the quick tour of the beautiful Marin Headlands, you cross back over the bridge and through the colorful Haight district, past the home of the San Francisco Giants, and on to the finish line. Runners start on the east side of the city, making their way along famous Fisherman's Wharf and the oceanfront Presidio, then across the Golden Gate Bridge. The course winds its way through the Kentucky and West Virginia countryside through Feud County, passing the bloody landmarks of this legendary battle between two pioneer families. Held at the winter home of Sugarbush Ski Resort, the course explores rural Vermont—dirt backroads, villages, historic barns, covered bridges, and fields of cattle—all while providing stunning views of the Green Mountains. Once the final round has finished, all quests from all rounds become free quests. If you aren't feeling up to the full 26 miles, a Pikes Peak Ascent is also offered, allowing runners to scale the mountain and catch a ride home. The gently rolling course, relatively small size (300 finishers in 2013), and breezy summer weather make this a good "easy" run for first-timers. "Advice to first timers would be to do some running ahead of time, at night via headlamp, with no surrounding street lamps," says Joyce Forier, of Calico Racing, the event organizers. For marathon runners, the Kona Marathon, held on the black lava fields of Hawaii's Big Island, offers just
